
BOULDER CONVENTION & VISITORS BUREAU

ONLINE WEB SURVEY

OCTOBER 2005

Introduction

This report summarizes the results of an online survey sent to people who had requested information from the Boulder Convention and Visitors Bureau website. This document serves to summarize the key findings and highlights from the survey results. The BCVB commissioned RRC Associates, a marketing research and consulting firm based in Boulder, CO, to develop the questionnaire, administer the survey, and process the results.

The survey was designed to collect information about those who requested information about Boulder – whether they visited the area or not, information about the trip (including purpose of the trip, party size, number of nights stayed, spending patterns, etc.), perceptions of what the area would be like before they visited, impressions of the area after they visited, prior visits, intent to return, general demographic information, and other information. The results provide a rich and varied profile of both the visitor base and potential visitors, and offer a glimpse into the motivations and perceptions of visitors to the Boulder area. In particular, the open-ended comments collected on the survey are helpful to more fully understand the visitor; the comments are summarized in this narrative report and are presented completely in the appendix section.

The email invitation to the survey was sent in mid-October 2005 to 5,450 names from the BCVB database. An incentive was offered for participation in the survey (one of four $100 gift certificates to L.L. Bean). A total of 491 valid surveys were received, for a margin of error of +/- 4.4 percent at the 95 percent confidence level.

Executive Summary

This section highlights some of the most salient information from the survey results. Please see the body of the report for more detail on these and other topics.

- Sixty-five percent indicated that they visited Boulder after receiving the information, a strong result. The other 35 percent had not yet visited Boulder.
- Fifty-eight percent said that the reason they requested the information was that they had definitely decided to take a trip to or through Boulder; thus, the information the Convention and Visitors Bureau sends out might be more tailored to those strongly considering coming or who have already decided to visit. It seems that the majority of those requesting information from the website had already decided to visit Boulder.

- Thirty-seven percent were traveling with children, and the average family group had 1.7 children with them on the trip.
- Travelers stayed in Boulder an average of 3.5 nights. Fifteen percent said that they were in town for a day visit only.
- General recreation is the primary motivator for the Boulder trip, as 44 percent cited it as the main reason for visiting. Visiting family and/or friends is also an important factor in visiting the area, as one-quarter said it was important. Twelve percent were visiting for a special event (sports, cultural, etc.), 8 percent were in town for a business convention or conference, and 4 percent were visiting for general business purposes.
- About half of the visitors were making their first trip to Boulder, indicating a healthy mix of new and repeat guests. Overall, 53 percent were on their first visit, 21 percent had visited once before, 9 percent had made two prior trips, and the remaining 15 percent had visited three or more times previously.
- The distinction between first time visitors and prior visitors is an important one, as repeat visitors tend to spend more money, tend to be more likely to return again, and are more likely to be visiting family or friends on their trip. Motivating return visits to the area could be an important strategy for the Convention & Visitors Bureau.
- The most popular leisure activities during the visit in Boulder were dining in local restaurants and walking/shopping/dining on the Pearl Street Mall, followed by shopping, hiking, visiting Celestial Seasonings, visiting Chautauqua, and CU-related leisure activities. Somewhat less popular but still important were night entertainment/bars/bands, visiting the Farmer's Market, attending a special event or festival, sightseeing at NCAR, and attending a cultural event.
- Total spending in Boulder averaged $1,191 per party, with a median of $725. The more visits a respondent has made to Boulder, the more they tend to spend.
- Satisfaction with the overall experience in Boulder was very high, with 65 percent rating it "excellent" (5 out of five), and 30 percent rating it "very good" (4 out of five). Only 5 percent rated the overall experience a three or less on the five point scale.
- Likelihood of return to Boulder in the next year is also very high, with 42 percent indicating that they "definitely will" return (5 out of five), and another 18 percent rating their likelihood of return a four out of five.
- Even among those who have not visited since requesting the information, intent to visit is high. Among those who did not visit Boulder since requesting the information, 35 percent said that they are considering a trip for later this year or next, with an additional 18 percent indicating that they have a definite trip planned this year or next.
- Those who visited Boulder tend to be families with kids or empty nesters, a bit older, and more affluent compared to those who had not yet visited. This latter group is more likely to be single or a couple without kids, a bit younger, with lower household incomes as compared to those who did visit.

Key Findings

Trip Planning

One of the key objectives of the survey was to determine the proportion of inquirers who actually visited Boulder. The results from the survey research are encouraging -- 65 percent indicated that they visited Boulder after receiving the information. The other 35 percent had not yet visited Boulder. A section later in the report profiles those who have not yet visited Boulder since receiving the information.

Fifty-eight percent said that the reason they requested the information was that they had definitely decided to take a trip to or through Boulder. It seems that the majority of those requesting information from the website had already decided to visit Boulder; thus, the information the Convention and Visitors Bureau sends out might be more tailored to those strongly considering coming or who have already decided to visit. Thirteen percent was considering a trip to or through Boulder, nine percent had definitely decided on a trip to Colorado, 5 percent was considering a trip to or through Colorado, and 14 percent gave an "other" reason for requesting the information. The graph on the following page illustrates the results from these two questions.

Among the other reasons for requesting the information were that the inquirer was considering moving/re-locating to Boulder, a son/daughter attending CU, and information for wedding party guests.

Figure I
Primary Reason for Requesting Information about Boulder

Travel Party

The average travel party size was 3 people, while the median was two people. Sixty five percent were traveling with a partner/spouse, 37 percent with children, 15 percent with other family members, and 8 percent with friends. About 15 percent were traveling alone on the visit to Boulder. The composition of the group is important in understanding the needs and expectations of visitors to Boulder.

Thirty-seven percent were traveling with children, and the average family group had 1.7 children with them on the trip. Forty-six percent had one child traveling with them, and 40 percent had two children.

Who was with you on the trip to Boulder?

Trip Characteristics

Travelers stayed in Boulder an average of 3.5 nights. Fifteen percent said that they were in town for a day visit only. The number of nights stayed is very evenly distributed between two and six nights, meaning that there is not really a “typical” length of stay. Overall, 8 percent stayed one night, 12 percent stayed two nights, 17 percent stayed three nights, 16 percent stayed four nights, 15 percent were in town five nights, and 11 percent visited for six to eight nights.

The majority (63 percent) indicated that Boulder was the primary destination for the trip, while 37 percent said that Boulder was a stop on a longer trip. The fact that so many said that Boulder was their primary destination is indicative of the overall strength and appeal of the area as a stand-alone tourist destination.

It is informative to recognize the other areas people visited in combination with their trip to Boulder. Some of those other places commonly include Denver, Rocky Mountain National Park, Colorado Springs, and Estes Park.

Prior Visits to Boulder

About half of the visitors were making their first trip to Boulder, indicating a healthy mix of new and repeat guests. Overall, 53 percent were on their first visit, 21 percent had visited once before, 9 percent had made two prior trips, and the remaining 15 percent had visited Boulder three or more times previously.

The distinction between first time visitors and prior visitors is an important one, as repeat visitors tend to spend more money, tend to be more likely to return again, and are more likely to be visiting family or friends on their trip. Motivating return visits to the area could be an important strategy for the Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Purpose of Trip

In terms of the purpose of the visit to Boulder, “general recreation” was the primary motivator for the Boulder trip, as 44 percent cited it as the main reason for visiting. Visiting family and/or friends is also an important factor in visiting the area, as one-quarter said it was important. Twelve percent were visiting for a special event (sports, cultural, etc.), 8 percent were in town for a business convention or conference, and 4 percent were visiting for general business purposes.

Twenty percent said they visited Boulder for an “other” reason. Commonly, those reasons included a wedding, a CU move/visit/drop off of child attending CU, Odyssey of the Mind, house hunting, and other activities and festivals.

Repeat visitors are more likely to say that they were in town to visit family or friends. First time visitors tend to cite a more specific reason, including a special event (sports, cultural, etc) or a business convention/conference, as the reason for visiting Boulder.

Impressions of Boulder

One of the objectives of the survey was to determine what people thought of Boulder before they arrived, and what they thought after they had visited. The survey asked two open-ended questions to ascertain these impressions: “Before your visit to Boulder, what words or phrases would you use to describe what you expected Boulder would be like?” and “After your visit, what would you tell a friend about Boulder?” A sampling of the responses is presented below, with the full text of the comments in the appendix section of this report.

Before your visit to Boulder, what words or phrases would you use to describe what you expected Boulder would be like?	After your visit, what would you tell a friend about Boulder?
Relaxing, near out-of-doors areas	Same as above. More nice shopping areas than the last time.
Fantastic scenery, vibrant, artsy, college town, sunny, friendly, environmentally concerned residents	Just a beautiful town - Recommend Pearl Street Mall, great bookstore! The college campus is absolutely beautiful, lots of bicyclers, People of all ages, the Dushanbe Teahouse is a must
Nice college town	One of the best places I have ever been, not to be missed
Beautiful, mountainous, rugged	Quaint college town with so many outdoor things to do
Just a suburb of Denver	Very unique town, very personable.
Very liberal	Not as liberal as I thought it would be. And very pretty place.
A college town	Much more than expected. A great place to visit
Mountain town	Way to busy. The hiking was like a freeway. Shopping (grocery) expensive.
Expected upbeat college town atmosphere with beautiful scenery	Very friendly, interesting place. Would be a wonderful place to live
College town	I loved it; very eclectic, artsy, laid back, beautiful setting.
Western type town, old buildings, quaint	Modern town, very busy, huge market
Skiing town	There are multiple varieties of things to do.
Cold and snowy	Absolutely beautiful
Knew nothing.	Awesome!!!!
I expected Boulder to be beautiful	Boulder and the vicinity were awesome, beyond words. Many things to see and do
Earthy Nature	Expensive Healthy Fun
Mountainous, beautiful, outdoor oriented	Pretty much the same thing - it was exactly as I expected.
Fun, exciting	Words or pictures cannot describe just how breath taking it is. You have to see it to believe it.
front door to the mountains	Many exceptional trails, but be aware of parking usage fees and overcrowding. Very clean and good organic food stores.

Activities

The most popular leisure activities during the visit in Boulder were dining in local restaurants and walking/shopping/dining on the Pearl Street Mall, followed by shopping, hiking, visiting Celestial Seasonings, visiting Chautauqua, and CU-related leisure activities. Somewhat less popular but still important were night entertainment/ bars/bands, visiting the Farmer’s Market, attending a special event or festival, sightseeing at NCAR, and attending a cultural event.

The survey also asked respondents to indicate which activities they were considering participating in prior to their arrival in Boulder. The general rank order of activities considered is similar to activities actually participated in, with some minor exceptions. For example, 81 percent said they were considering walking/shopping/dining on the Pearl Street Mall prior to their arrival; 93 percent said they actually participated in Pearl Street activities.

Figure 4
Activities Intended to Participate In and Actually Participated In

Spending in Boulder

Total spending in Boulder averaged $1,191 per party, with a median of $725. The more visits a respondent has made to Boulder, the more they tend to spend. First time visitors averaged $1,226 (median $700), those who have been one to five times previously spent $1,049 on average (median $750), and guests who have visited more than five times averaged $1,332 in spending ($825 median). The total spending amount equates to approximately $115 per person per day.

Non-visitors

It is instructive to understand the group that did not visit Boulder, which compromised 35 percent of survey respondents. Among that segment, the intent to visit is high and the reason for not visiting tends to be that there is a trip to Boulder planned later.

Of those who hadn't visited Boulder since receiving the information, 35 percent said they are considering a trip for later this year or next year, while another 18 percent indicated that they have a definite trip planned to Boulder later this year or next. These results reveal a strong intent to visit Boulder, an encouraging sign for future visits.

Other reasons for not visiting the Boulder area include that the respondent was considering a trip, but turned out to be unable to go (14 percent), and considering a trip but decided to go elsewhere (12 percent). The other places people visited instead of Boulder were extremely varied, and no one place emerged as a particular competitor of Boulder. Some of the places mentioned include San Diego, Greeley, Colorado Springs, Denver, Glenwood Springs, Steamboat Springs, and Las Vegas.

Some other reasons for not visiting mentioned on the survey include "considering moving to the area," "ran out of time," and "may move to Boulder someday."

Why haven't you visited Boulder since requesting the information?

Ratings of Experience

Satisfaction with the overall experience in Boulder was very high, with 65 percent rating it “excellent” (5 out of five), and 30 percent rating it “very good” (4 out of five). Only 5 percent rated the overall experience a three or less on the five point scale.

Likelihood of return to Boulder in the next year is also very high, with 42 percent indicating that they “definitely will” return (5 out of five), and another 18 percent rating their likelihood of return a four out of five. Seventeen percent gave a three out of five, 8 percent a two out of five, and 15 percent a one out of five. The average score overall is 3.6 out of five.

Likelihood of Return to Boulder in the Next Year
by Number of Prior Visits to Boulder

Following the likelihood of return question, respondents were asked to explain why they gave the answer they did. The responses are quite varied and numerous, and the reader is encouraged to read the full text of the comments in the appendix section of this report. A sampling of the comments is presented here.

Among those who rated their likelihood of return a three or lower, the reason for the low likelihood tends to be because of lack of time or too much distance, and not because of some bad experience or poor impression of Boulder. Some comments about why they are unlikely to return include:

We live 1,100 miles away. (And my family isn't as enraptured with the Rockies as I am!)
Loved the city and the area, but we were there for a wedding - like to travel to other areas
No plans, other vacations planned
Other sites to see in other areas
Don't think I'll have the time
Because we don't have another trip to Colorado planned for next year
We hold our reunion in a different city each year. Personal travel plans for next year are primarily international, but definitely plan to return to Boulder at some point. Have discussed it as a possible relocation site

Those who were likely to return gave a multitude of reasons for saying they were likely to return. Some of those comments include:

Enjoyed my initial visit very much
We're planning to move there son may go to college there
I have family there and I simply love visiting the town
My son lives in Denver and we enjoying coming to Boulder sightsee and shop
Because I like the school I visited
I always like visiting Boulder

Demographics

The demographic characteristics of respondents tend to differ somewhat by whether the person visited Boulder since requesting the information or not. This section profiles some of those differences, as well as some of the similarities, between the two groups.

Those who visited Boulder tend to be families with kids or empty nesters, a bit older, and more affluent compared to those who had not yet visited. This latter group is more likely to be single or a couple without kids, a bit younger, with lower household incomes as compared to those who did visit.

Respondent Demographics

Figure 8
Respondent Demographics
 By Visitors and Non-Visitors (2 of 2)

Geographic Origin

The geographic origin of inquirers is also of interest. Again, the results are presented by those inquirers who actually visited Boulder and by those who did not visit.

The geographic distribution of both visitors and non-visitors is quite broad, with most market areas and states represented. In terms of the market area of residence, 7.6 percent of visitors were from the New York City market area, followed by Chicago, Denver, Los Angeles, Boston, Washington, DC, Milwaukee, and Philadelphia. Interestingly, many non-visitors are from the Los Angeles area (10.2 percent of non-visitors), followed by Washington, DC and Kansas City. These areas might be important generators of visitation in the future.

Designated Market Area
By Visitors and Non-Visitors

Looking at the geographic origin by state of residence shows that California is the top state for both visitors and non-visitors, while Wisconsin is tied for number two for visitors to Boulder (tied with Illinois and Colorado). Texas, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania are all important states for visitors as well. In terms of non-visitors, California is the top state, followed by Texas, Ohio, Virginia, Florida, and Illinois.
